The reflexes were abolished; urine examination showed a trace of albumin. The possibility of the case being one of apoplexy was constantly in mind, but a rigid examination made to elicit signs of hemiplegia was of no avail. When one considers this typical group of symptoms in conjunction with the fact that the patient was a Chinaman, and more than probably addicted to opium, the diagnosis seemed positive. In two days the coma subsided sufficiently for signs of hemiplegia to appear, and the diagnosis of apoplexy was readily made. WOOD ALCOHOL POISONING. By Surg. H. E. Odei. I, I. S. Navy. Among the cases of poisoning which we are constantly encountering in the Navy, wood alcohol holds a prominent place. It is...
