Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: .excellent work of Miiller on the green turtle, supplemented by Fritsch s work on the land turtle, and by such dissections as the writer has made on the mud turtles found in the vicinity of Iowa City. The specimens dissected were mostly Chrysemys marginata, although specimens of Chelydra serpentina and of Amyda mutica were also studied. The turtles were killed with chloral hydrate or with chloroform. The blood-vessels were injected with red and with blue gelatin, while the lymphatics were injected with a thin yellow gelatin mass. The melting-point of the gelatin was lowered by adding potassium iodid to the melted solution. The posterior lymph hearts were studied by exposing them after the animal had been chloroformed. As they continue to beat for some time after they have been exposed, they are very easily found and studied. Their connections with adjacent veins can readily be demonstrated by injecting India ink into their cavity. For the preparation of the embryonic material a large number of fixing agents were used. Corrosive sublimate solutions were, as a rule, not satisfactory, although Zenker s fluid gave fairly good results. Gilson s fluid proved very unsatisfactory, especially with large embryos. The mesenchymal tissues were poorly fixed and the material did not keep well. By far the best results for embryos of all stages were obtained by using mixtures of chromic and acetic acids with pure formaldehyde. These mixtures seem to penetrate the thick shell more readily and to fix the internal...
